On August 17, 2012, Jesus Molina was at the ATM at the Chase Bank Branch at Signal Butte and Baseline Roads in Mesa. As he was counting his money, he fell backwards. “And that’s all I remember,” he said. Molina’s heart stopped beating.

“I think a word that best described those events that day would definitely have to be: Shocking,” said Shelby Slaughter, a new employee at the Chase Branch. “Shocking, because when Jesus Molina collapsed we had another customer to translate for his wife and assure her that he was going to be okay. It was also shocking because Don Taylor, another Chase employee, and I just happened to be in the branch that day and we both know CPR. In a moment like that, there is really nothing going on in your mind. Adrenaline just kicks in at that point, and your main focus is this person lying lifeless in front of you. At a moment like that, his life is in your hands. And that is exactly how Don and I took it. We worked so well together for not knowing each other prior to this incident, and exchanged little words. And lastly, it was shocking because Jesus Molina survived. And it is amazing that he is with us today. I am so thankful to be a part in bringing him back to his family.”

Mr. Molina said he and his family thank Shelby from the bottom of their hearts. He said every time his ribs hurt, he thinks of Shelby. He says, “She was my angel. She saved my life.”
