Finding vaccines for an adult depends on identifying locations that carry vaccines that the adult needs, and whether or not the adult has a health insurance policy that covers vaccines.

Your physician or health care provider: Patients need to check with their health care providers as to if they carry vaccines, what vaccines they carry, and which insurance plans they accept.

Community health centers: People who do not have health insurance can often work with community health centers to get care on a sliding scale. Community health centers also usually will accept patients who have health insurance. Patients need to check with their community health center for further details.

Pharmacies: Pharmacies can give most vaccines to adults without a prescription, except for some travel-related vaccines. Usually patients have to pay cash to get vaccines at a pharmacy because many pharmacies do not have contracts with health insurance companies for vaccines. Adults will need to check with their health care insurance company and the specific pharmacy for full details.

County Health Departments: Often adults can get vaccines at county health departments, but they usually have to pay for them. Some county health departments have billing systems that can bill the adult's health insurance company for the vaccines. Check with your county health department for full details.

Travel clinics, immunization clinics, and occupational health clinics: These locations often have established contracts with health insurance companies for giving vaccines to patients who have health insurance coverage. The adult will need to check with the specific clinic to find out what vaccines they carry, and if they accept their health insurance coverage. Some of these clinics include Passport Health, Mollen Immunization Clinics, and Concentra.
