Project Highlights

The project had cross-agency coordination between Child Care Licensing, the Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program, and the Arizona State Public Health Laboratory.

Child care licensing surveyors collected drinking water samples during licensing compliance inspections or complaint investigations for facilities inspected between September 2017 and September 2018. Samples were analyzed by the Arizona State Public Health Laboratory to screen for the presence of lead. If lead was detected above the Environmental Protection Agency action level of 15 parts per billion, additional samples were collected by the Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program for confirmatory testing.

1,055 facilities were tested with 2,255 total drinking water samples collected.

Less than 1% of facilities had samples with lead concentrations above the screening levels.

4 facilities* had samples with lead concentrations above the screening level.

0 of the 4 facilities had samples above the screening level after their fixture was flushed for 2 minutes.

All drinking water samples with lead concentrations above the screening level were collected from indoor water fountains.

Flushing fixtures for 2 minutes was an effective approach for lowering levels.

Project Description

Introduction

Lead is a naturally occurring heavy metal, but most human exposures to high lead levels in the environment are due to human activities. Lead has been widely used in a variety of products and materials such as pipes, paints, ceramics, and gasoline. When ingested or inhaled, lead can have adverse effects on nearly all organ systems in the body. Children under the age of six years are especially at risk because they are still developing, absorb lead easily, and have a tendency to put their hands and objects in their mouths. Lead exposure often occurs with no obvious signs and symptoms. In children, lead poisoning can cause slowed development, reading and other learning problems, behavioral problems, as well as brain, liver, and kidney damage. Pregnant women can also pass lead to their unborn babies.

For these reasons, major public health campaigns have focused on eliminating childhood lead poisoning. Childhood lead poisoning is entirely preventable; however, it remains one of the most common environmental health dangers to children.

In September, 2017, the Arizona Department of Health Services (ADHS) launched a project to screen water in many Arizona licensed child care facilities for lead. This project provided an opportunity to increase childhood lead poisoning awareness among child care providers. While drinking water has not historically been found to be a cause of lead poisoning in Arizona, this project helped to ensure that ADHS supports our child care partners in promoting health and wellness for all Arizonans.

Cross-Agency Coordination

The project was a cross-agency collaboration between the Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program, Bureau of Child Care Licensing, and Arizona State Public Health Laboratory, Office of Chemistry.

Child Care Licensing surveyors collected water from a sample of drinking water sources at facilities while conducting facility inspections, and returned the water to the Arizona State Public Health Laboratory for lead testing. Members of Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program reviewed the results to determine whether the sampled water meets the safe drinking water standard for lead content. If screening levels were found above safe drinking water standards for lead at any facility, additional water testing was conducted.

Water Testing Services

Water testing services were offered to licensed child care facilities. Small group homes, certified residential homes, and public schools offering child care services were not part of the water testing project. Additionally, child care facilities that used bottled water for drinking and cooking (rather than tap) were exempt from this project. Facilities were sampled during compliance inspections or complaint investigations during hours of operation. Adhering to protocols for inspections and complaint investigations, facilities were not notified prior to the onsite visit.

Sample Analysis Methodology

The laboratory work was performed by ADHS Chemistry using Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) analytical method 200.8 on an inductively coupled plasma mass spectrometer (ICP-MS). The Arizona State Public Health Laboratory is an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA)-accredited drinking water laboratory and all analytical work was performed under EPA Safe Drinking Water criteria. The screening level used for this project was EPA action level of 15 parts per billion (ppb).

Initial Drinking Water Screening

Sampling Methodology

Child care surveyors collected up to 8 drinking water samples from up to 8 different fixtures per facility. Sampled water sources include fixtures used by children and staff for drinking, preparing formula, or food. Samples were collected as the facility would use the water. Surveyors did not remove any attachments, filters, or aerators, or flush the water source before collection. Collected water samples were kept at room temperature and submitted to the Arizona State Public Health Laboratory within two weeks by the surveyor or courier service. Child care facilities were notified via email whether their samples were above the screening level and provided with recommendations in advance of confirmatory testing.

Screening Results

1,055 facilities were tested.

2,255 drinking water samples were collected.

559 samples were collected from kitchen sinks.

264 samples were collected from classroom sinks.

876 samples were collected from indoor drinking fountains.

479 samples were collected from outdoor drinking fountains.

77 samples were collected from other sources. Other drinking water sources were collected from indoor and outdoor locations, such as staff offices, non-classroom areas, refrigerators, water coolers, filtration systems, and outdoor sinks.

Less than 1% of facilities had samples above the screening level.

4 facilities had samples with lead concentrations above the screening level.

Confirmatory Drinking Water Screening

Sampling Methodology

When screening results had lead concentrations above the screening level, the Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention Program (CLPPP) notified the facility via phone to schedule confirmatory testing and contacted the facility via email with recommendations. Confirmatory testing was scheduled and occurred before water was in use. Water must not have been in use for at least eight hours but no longer than 48 hours. Two confirmatory samples were collected from all drinking water fixtures in use within the facility: an initial sample and a flushed sample. Water was run for approximately two minutes before collecting the second, flushed sample. No attachments, filters, or aerators were removed for confirmatory testing. Child care facilities were notified via phone and email of sample results and recommendations.

Confirmatory Investigation Results

2 facilities did not have samples above the screening level during additional sampling.

2 facilities had samples above the screening level during additional confirmatory sampling.

All drinking water samples with lead concentrations above the screening level were collected from indoor water fountains.

0 of the 4 facilities had samples above the screening level after their fixture was flushed for 2 minutes.

Recommendations Provided

Institute a daily flushing protocol flushing all drinking water fixtures for 2 minutes before using the water for drinking, preparing formula or cooking.

Service water fountains according to manufacturer's recommendations.
